“The whole aim of the Montessori system can be summed up as the ‘valorization of personality’ at each stage. This involves, amongst other things, that the child should acquire as much independence as is possible...at each stage of development.”

-Dr. Montessori, (Maria Montessori Her Life and Work, p. 177)

We are enjoying the beautiful autumn season! There are so many interesting names for the crisp apples and crunchy leaves. Our practical life area is bustling with activity: scrubbing, slicing, chopping, misting, and wringing. The sensorial area engages our young scientists to explore through their senses. Each day we add to our sandpaper letter wall: tracing and saying the sounds helps us remember them! Independence is created through each of the children’s purposeful activities: from the moment they hang their coats on hangers and put their shoes on, they gain physical independence. The greatest help we can give them is the freedom of movement within an environment filled with sensorial stimulation.

Our first Parent Friday was a wonderful connection of home to school!

Ava repeats her wringing cloths lesson: carefully she readies it for the next person.
